

Polyphony is a type of musical texture consisting of two or more simultaneous lines of independent melody, as opposed to a musical texture with just one voice (monophony) or a texture with one dominant melodic voice accompanied by chords (homophony).

Within the context of the Western musical tradition, the term polyphony is usually used to refer to music of the late Middle Ages and Renaissance

Polyphonic voice beatboxing is a fascinating and challenging art form within the beatboxing community, showcasing a performer's ability to produce multiple pitches simultaneously. By mastering techniques such as throat singing, overtone singing, and the use of different vocal registers like head voice and chest voice, beatboxers can create a symphony of sounds using just their voices. The complexity of polyphonic beatboxing lies in the beatboxer's skill to seamlessly blend these pitches while maintaining rhythm and beat. This skill not only enhances the musicality of a beatboxing performance but also pushes the boundaries of what can be achieved with the human voice. As beatboxers continue to innovate and experiment, polyphonic beatboxing remains a testament to the versatility and creativity inherent in vocal music.

Ūsiņš, the god of light, spring, bees, and horses (twin sons pulling the Sun's chariot like Vedic Ashvins), rides in on Ūsiņi Day (April 23/Jurģi or May 9 Gregorian)—midway between equinox and solstice, marking winter's end and summer's ignition. Rites purge stagnation, invoke renewal: drive horses to first pasture (pieguļa night-watch with fires, songs, pine boughs guarding from wolves/thieves), sacrifice black rooster for blessings, feast eggs/meat/beer, plow naked pre-dawn furrow for field fertility (phallic power equal to creative thunder). Young men sleep in fields protecting herds, honoring Ūsiņš as dawn bringer greening grass/leaves, blooming life from dark.
